In Don't Make Me Think, usability expert Steve Krug distills his years of experience and observation into clear, practical--and often amusing--common sense advice for the people in the trenches (the designers, programmers, writers, editors, and Webmasters), the people who tell them what to do (project managers, business planners, and marketing people), and even the people who sign the checks.

Don't Make Me Think! A Common Sense Approach to Web ...

Law #1: Don't make me think. This is the overarching rule. Each time a user has to pause (even for a split-second) to think about something, it distracts him from the action you want him to take. The goal is to make your website effortless to use, i.e. make it self-explanatory, if not self-evident.

Don't Make Me Think. As a rule, people don't like to puzzle over how to do things. If people who build a site don't care enough to make things obvious it can erode confidence in the site and its publishers. Don't waste my time. Much of our web use is motivated by the desire to save time. As a result, web users tend to act like sharks.
